Ethan Bronner, Jerusalem Bureau Chief, The New York Times will combine diplomatic and political analysis with behind-the-scenes stories from his reporting to explore the challenges faced by a journalist covering two distinctly opposing narratives: the Israeli-Palestinian conflict in 2010. He will address such complex issues as balance, fairness, access and reader expectations.

Ethan Bronner has written about the Arab-Israeli conflict for more than 25 years. Previously deputy foreign editor of The Times, Bronner served as Middle East bureau chief for The Boston Globe in the 1990s and as deputy Jerusalem bureau chief for Reuters in the mid-1980s.
