AARON HUEY

Amplifier.org is a nonprofit design lab that has mounted visual campaigns like We The People, which flooded the streets for the Women's March and 2017 Presidential Inauguration protests. Amplifier believes in the power of art at threshold moments. In times of uncertainty like these, when fear and misinformation attempt to divide us, art is a catalyst for real change and a bridge that can unite movements with shared values in ways other mediums cannot. Art is a compass that points to the future we want to live in, and that we want our children to live in. A reception will follow.

Aaron Huey is a National Geographic photographer, a Stanford Media Designer, Creative Director of Amplifier, and a Contributing Artist at Harper's Magazine. Huey is also widely known for his 3,349-mile solo walk across America (with his dog Cosmo) and his TED talk on Native American P.O.W. Camps.

Free Amplifier art stickers will be given to the first 20 attendees.
