This symposium brings together scholars working in Iberian, Middle Eastern, and Medieval Studies to engage in a critical discussion concerning race—reevaluating both its utility as a category of analysis in the premodern world and how it has structured medieval and early modern studies as academic fields.

Participants include:

- PAMELA PATTON (Art History, Princeton University)
- M. LINDSAY KAPLAN (English, Georgetown University)
- HANNAH BARKER (History, Arizona State University)
- MOHAMAD BALLAN (History, SUNY Stony Brook)
- AMBEREEN DADABHOY (Literature, Harvey Mudd College)
- JOSH COHEN (Committee on the Study of Religion, Harvard University)
- ABDULHAMIT ARVAS (English, University of Pennsylvania)
- TERENCE KEEL (African American Studies & Institute for Society and Genetics, UCLA)
- KATHY LAVEZZO (English, University of Iowa)

Sponsored by the Interdisciplinary Humanities Center; Medieval Studies; Early Modern Center, English Department; Center for Middle Eastern Studies; College of Letters & Science; History Department; and Latin American and Iberian Studies
